1. Beware of crowd control methods
 2. Make sure your group leaders don't get arrested
 3. Use apps like Briar for communication
 4. Stay safe and don't do anything dumb
 5. Have fun while taking country back

Crowd control methods used:

- spreading the crowd using diversions and distractions such as symbolic goals, Antifa etc
- road blocks and riot police blocking streets
- professional agitators and controlled rioting
- blocking communication, switching off internet
- taking down leadership
- spreading disinfo and confusion

The point is to take care of communication and not rely only on regular ways. The internet might not work. Briar is not available for iPhone but it allows messages to be sent via Bluetooth. It's also secure. Another option is walky talkies or regular old shouting.

Be prepared with quarters (cash coins) because D.C./Northern Virginia is rife with pay to play road sections with State Troopers there to enforce it all to the letter.

It keeps the unwashed masses from using elite roadways, where money is never an issue, simple notation in one of their TWO sets of books. (corrupt officials)

permalink parent save report block reply

▼ The toll roads in DC/NOVA are not coin-based. You MUST have an ez-Pass with your credit card attached to them. Be aware that Rt.66 from 495 into the city is entirely a toll-road from 0530-0930 going into the city (eastbound) and 1500-1900 leaving the city.

NONE of our toll roads are like the NJ-turnpike or PA toll road. With the exception of the Dulles Toll Road, there are no toll-stations. They only take the ez-Pass for these sections.

permalink parent save report block reply

▲ 800080 4 months ago +7 / -0

7 ▼ Other EZPass locations have pay-by-plate. Has DC/NoVA deployed this?

Other notes:

If you rent a car, you may need to rent a transponder. The rental companies have been known to charge insane fees ($xx.xx) to process dollar toll(s). Ask when renting. Renting the transponder isn't cheap.

If you already have an EZPass and are renting, you can bring it and use that if you want to. Log in and add the rental and license plate to your account, then delete it later. Otherwise the state will probably look up your plate and send you a bill and they will charge a service fee too.

For those of you concerned about being tracked, Massachusetts just stopped their 5 year old License Plate Surveillance program. Turns out there were accuracy issues. Now that almost everyone has an EZPass, I'm sure they changed over to using that system. News stories provide support for that theory.

If you rent a car, likely it would only be looked it up if the vehicle got involved with something like being parked next to an RV. Otherwise they don't have the time.

You don't even want to know what ODBC IV might be doing.

2 ▼ Regarding EZPass in DC/NoVA: With the police parked just beyond the sensor, they WILL stop you and issue you a ticket for not having an EZPass here. However, if you do get through without getting stopped you can avoid the toll-violation ticket by paying the missed tolls in VA at the following website.

<https://www.tollroadsinvirginia.com/MissedToll/FindMissedToll/>

Just be careful with the Toll-roads here and have a blast in DC next week.

12 ▼ I've read some other good tips here:

Wear good walking boots. No tennis shoes because in a rush of people, they'll get stepped on and pulled off.

Bring a cheap backpack with snacks, water, ibuprofen, sunscreen, etc. Cheap because If there is that rush of people, your backpack will be pulled off just like your shoes.

Bring a pair of leatherman or similar type pliers. Tons of uses: allows you to perform some types of first aid, take off metal ties on fencing if needed, open wine (joke), etc.

I intend to wear a mask. Not against the Chy-Nah virus but against video, photos, and dox attempts.

I'll also be wearing sunglasses but leave your ray-bans at home with your ascot and bourgeois alligator gloves. Glasses will get knocked off too.

Bonus because if there is a pepper spray event, a mask and a good pair of real safety glasses will afford you a modicum of protection vs. nothing.

Wear layers. Layers of clothes you can shed if needed. You may never wear the clothes again, so again, no pricey gear.

Lots more great tips around here, hopefully we can get a sticky going at some point with these things.

...and a compass. I like to travel and, before offline maps became a thing, my compass have saved me many times. A paper map doesn't have a 'You are here.'-dot but if you know approximately where you are a compass will help you move in a direction of easily identifiable features.

I still bring a compass along. It's still useful in keeping the right direction so you can save battery power.

HTH:

DC is laid out quite sensibly. Numbered streets: North/south

Alphabet streets: East/west. Syllables increase the farther out from the center of DC you are. For example, 'A' Street, then Adam Street, then Abigail Street.

Avenues run diagonally northeast/southeast and northwest/southwest. One exception is Georgia Avenue, which starts in town as Seventh Street, then becomes Georgia Avenue as you go north toward Maryland--I *think *somewhere in the second (two-syllable) alphabet.

ETA: DC has designated quadrants: NE, NW, SE, SW. All fairly safe close in (Mall, federal buildings, etc.). Farther out is a little dicier, NE, SE and SW especially.

One of those bubbles compasses that pins to your jacket can keep you going in the right direction. You can pocket your better compass and pull it out if something more precise is needed.

Look, those devices belong to the enemy. In the best circumstances you might get them to behave and do useful work for you. But in most circumstances they are just homing beacons riddled with spy devices and enough back doors that the bad guys can shut off all the useful bits when they want to.

Do you understand? Cell phones and fly-by-wire automobile technology are routinely used to surveil, locate, entrap, and even kill enemies of the intelligence community and the globalist cabal that controls them. Are you joking, man? You agree to all of it in the terms of use of most apps you install. Your Android and Apple phones both come pre-installed with the core parts of the Facebook metrics and telemetry gathering package. It's enabled by default, it's running even if you don't ever use the Facebook app on your device. Most popular apps are doing the same shit, anyway. That's even before we get into all the numerous management engine exploits over the past decade that affect most modern CPUs, those were not a convenient series of accidents, I promise you. Have you read the Vault 7 wikileaks dump or any other related stuff? Or are you just going "Naw, that can't be true or it woulda been on the news."

Use junk devices for this sort of thing. Record of devices in the area are tracked and analyzed added to database for future fishing expeditions. The trick is always be feeding junk data into those systems to pollute the usefulness of anything in there. Sure, some manual cleanup can be done to clean records, that takes time and effort and generally it's too inconvenient to be worth that effort. The effort to clean up an individual record generally doesn't take place unless they really want that individual, processes used aim for the 'good enough' effort for the widest population. Consider the faraday cage. Silver lined argonmesh is cheap enough to silence electronic devices when not in use, disabling any passive signal the device may be giving off.

Likely it is congestion, but if GEOTUS himself was there, I wouldn't rule out jamming.

A cell tower antenna system has a limited number of calls it can drain out of the tower into the rest of the phone system. It used to be actual voice circuits but it's probably VoIP or another voice over packet protocol these days, but the limit will be bandwidth not the number of circuits.

The wireless side coverage will seem to get 'smaller' the more users that are using it. If it is your tower, you may see less bars and/or your phone may place calls, deliver texts or get to the Internet. If it's the user on the other end, you could get voice mail or your texts may not be deliverable.

I don't want to further hijack a map thread into communications.

I wrote a longer, separate post to discuss communications work arounds including SMS over Radio with a materials review of GoTenna and a briefer one for Beartooth, and a brief chat of SMS over Wifi Direct and voice radios.

▼ Yes it's China made, but the range capacity with an aftermarket antenna is extreme- all you have to do is not be an idiot with it and not overpower frequency channels- cheap, effective, and easy to use- also compatible with Kenwood style plugs for headsets.

Of course if you can acquire a PRC-152 or other generation type of handset is better, but for the lad on a budget it works in the mountains over decent range - it should work in DC

12 ▼ When this war starts calming down, we need to go back and take a good, hard, iron-fisted look at what they're teaching in schools today. Bring back home economics, metal, wood, and auto shop, music theory, cursive writing, and most importantly: respect and discipline among students. I don't want to say public schooling should be a privilege, since we want every kid receiving a proper education, but there has to be a hard and fast result when we have kids throwing shit at the teacher and refusing to sit down and put their phones away.

Like, a former SEAL shows up and humiliates you with 1 hand behind his back and reminds everyone why you're learning and receiving an education, and also where the door is located if you decide you want to reject this gift from society.

3 ▼ I agree man. I always tried to be respectful and only ever resisted unjust authority abuses or power-tripping in school (part of why I'm right-wing to this day). Besides that I always tried to behave well and be courteous to my teachers if they did the same for me.

Part of the problem in my opinion is also to do with the teachers themselves. What is it about them that really merits respect? I viewed a lot of my schoolmates as indecent degenerates with no respect, of course, but sometimes I viewed who they lashed out against and its not really surprising. A lot of these disrespectful, immature, power abusing types that get into teaching. Worse is when they're leftist teachers as well.

I think it'd be a lot different if you had men, combat vets, educated individuals with a lot of mental discipline and intelligence that sort of commands a type of respect from young crowds. But instead you have these chronically emotional, authoritarian types in there who are leftists and simply want to collect a paycheck.

Of course some of the kids were disgusting little future leftists, but in the grand scheme of things I saw it almost like a small display of citizens displeased with those ruling over t ▼

▼ Yes, a lot of hall monitors and quibblers and pathetic people do go on to become teachers and it shows in how they run their classrooms. But that's where we get into a major part of the problem: teachers' unions. They ultimately act against all market forces that would otherwise remove ineffective and unlikable teachers... And I totally agree with having actual role models working as teachers, with the bookish types (who you really can't look up to the same way) providing materiel support.

▼ In case you get lost, don't have a map, and you can't get cell service:

DC is basically a grid patterned layout, especially downtown. Numbered streets run north/south, lettered streets run east/west. Streets w/ state names run diagonal, NE/SW or NW/SE.

If you see a NW, SW, SE, or NE designation, the intersection that is the starting point for those is North (or South) Capitol Street and Constitution Avenue (which is basically the US capitol building). Everything starts there and the numbered streets increase in number as you travel outward east or west.

Since I'm a DC native, I see protests all the time. I can tell you that there is NO WAY that the DC police and feds can muster enough manpower to stop 250K+ people. Anything they can put up can be overrun.

 "which is what everyone from DC says"

Fair point. The main portion of DC where all of the action is going to be is more like a "grid" than anything else in the city. It definitely doesn't look like a piece of graph paper but for where we are all going to be - if you need to get somewhere fast, follow the rules about how the streets work and you'll get around fine.

And yeah...NE and SE DC is fucking rough. I hate working in those areas.

5 ▼ "TripTik". You can actually walk into your local AAA and get it on the spot. Might need to call ahead for an appointment.

We did this all the time when I was a kid. Every time we vacationed, I remember my parents going in to the AAA office and telling them where we were going, and they'd go to this huge wall of slots with the strip maps in them, and assemble it right there, with the route highlighted. Sometimes they'd just say they were going somewhere, and make a fantasy trip without ever leaving the house. I was always somewhat scandalized by this, but we paid them every year, so I guess we got our money's worth (hardly ever needed to use the towing service, thank God.)

1 That's a thing that's less insidious than it looks - because think about the older Nextel's and Motorola's , just buy a new battery for (let's just say) 15-20$, phone is only 90$- and it's good for another couple of years.

Make the batteries internal : original phone 90$, couple years later the battery starts to fail-

Option A : take it the propriety tech shop for battery replacement where profit margins are extreme for a new battery that might only last a year or so before the same symptoms crop up again

Option B : The one they try to push you into , A new phone at 110$ that will last only a couple years before battery starts to fail and rinse and repeat as each new phone goes up in price

1 But the point of the post is all about profit - slowly raise the price and the normies won't notice too much with those 2 year contracts

▲ muslimporn 4 months ago +1 / -0

1 All benefits are weighed in when making design decisions and often they are bone headed like everyone else is doing it. It's a real problem that idiots are duped into buying a new phone each year to stay on contract when these days if you pay $500 or more on a phone you can expect that to last at least 4 years. A lot of people are being duped into buying over priced highend phones that are typically 10% better at 200% the price on finance.

There really should be a lot more consumer kickback against the phone industry but there isn't or other purely ornamental adornments.

That aside however I think there is pressure on operators to support embedded batteries that's not purely commercial. It's being pushed on consumers who aren't asking for it and don't want it. Regardless it puts you in a sticky situation where you have a device on your person you can't trust.
